Riedener Waldsee – Nature, History & Relaxation

The Riedener Waldsee, idyllically situated between Rieden and the Riedener Mühlen, was created in the early 1980s by damming the Rehbach stream.

Planning dates back to the 1970s and was largely driven by the then District Administrator, Dr. Georg Klinkhammer, in whose honor the access road was also named. The recreational area was approved in 1974 and officially opened on August 28, 1982.

Today, the lake—covering around four hectares with a maximum depth of approximately eight meters—invites visitors to relax and unwind. With sunbathing lawns, bathing jetties, and walking paths, it is perfect for swimming, boating, or a leisurely stroll. The Waldsee is a popular destination for guests from near and far. With a touch of humor, it is also referred to as the largest “holy water basin in the world,” a nod to the nearby spring at the parish house.

The surrounding area is a valuable habitat for a wide variety of animals and plants. With a bit of luck, you may spot ducks, grey herons, or even a kingfisher. Deer, foxes, and squirrels inhabit the nearby forests, while dragonflies and butterflies enliven the lakeshore. The combination of water, woodland, and meadows makes the Waldsee a special place of peace, relaxation, and natural beauty.

We wish you a pleasant stay at Riedener Waldsee.
